Liu Bolin, Hiding in the city - Municipal Waste, 2014 Archival pigment print, 120 x 150 cm

L'exposition Revealing Disappearance dévoilera les toutes dernières réalisations de l'artiste chinois Liu Bolin, profondément engagé sur les questions environnementales.

Très tôt dans sa carrière, l'écologie devient un sujet majeur de sa production artistique. En 2011, il brave les eaux polluées du fleuve Jaune, situé dans l'une des régions les plus industrialisées de son pays. En 2015, il organise une performance collective au bord d'une grande forêt artificielle destinée à empêcher la propagation du désert de Gobi dans les Territoires de la Chine septentrionale. En 2016, il pose parmi des montagnes d'ordures dans un centre de collecte à Bangalore, en Inde. En juin 2017, l'artiste s'est rendu sur la Côte Atlantique Française pour réaliser deux nouvelles performances en collaboration avec Surfrider Foundation Europe. Son objectif: contribuer à alerter l'opinion publique sur la problématique des déchets aquatiques. L'ONG Surfrider mène des campagnes de sensibilisation et multiplie les actions contre la pollution causée par les déchets plastiques et oeuvre ainsi en faveur de la protection de l'océan.

Les photographies liées à sa plus récente intervention en France figureront dans l'exposition, à côté de ses précédentes performances réalisées en Chine et en Inde, où l'industrialisation fulgurante et la croissance vertigineuse de la population ont affecté les climats urbains, en particulier la qualité de l'air. Selon le rapport du State of Global Air 2017, en 2015, les deux pays ont connu environ 1,1 million de décès prématurés en raison de la pollution atmosphérique.

Liu Bolin, Hiding in the city 97, Yellow River, 2011, Archival pigment print, 120 x 150 cm

En même temps que son travail photographique, une installation in situ de la série VISA Portrait, composée d'une douzaine de filtres à air de voiture, sera également exposée à la galerie. La différence chromatique due au degré de pollution de ses composants attire immédiatement l'attention du spectateur. Une deuxième lecture révèle le portrait d'un inconnu. L'installation joue avec le concept d'individualité et la notion de cause à effet.

Liu Bolin, The Winter Solstice, 2016, video, 28m (video still)

La vidéo de 28 minutes Winter Solstice (2016) sera également présentée au public pour la première fois à Paris. Sur les notes de Musical Erratum de Marcel Duchamp des danseurs camouflés luttent en disparaissant dans le smog de Pékin. Le titre fait référence à la date du 20 décembre, précédant de deux jours le solstice d'hiver, une festivité importante dans le calendrier chinois traditionnel. La chorégraphie s'inspire des mouvements que l'homme fait instinctivement avant de rendre son dernier souffle. Cet ensemble de travaux représente une réflexion sur les conséquences délétères des actions humaines sur notre propre habitat. Nous sommes désormais bien loin des principes taoïstes au cœur de la tradition chinoise, évoquant une relation harmonieuse et durable entre les humains et la nature.

Pour Liu Bolin, «l'homme se développe en détruisant son propre environnement. Le prix qu'il doit payer pour la splendide civilisation est la perte de conscience de son appartenance au règne animal. En profitant du développement qu'il a accompli, l'homme est en train de creuser sa tombe par sa propre cupidité. Les gens exigent trop de la nature et de l'environnement. Nous réaliserons bientôt combien nous sommes minuscules. Notre désir domine notre comportement. Nous allons faire face à beaucoup de problèmes à l'avenir».

En disparaissant dans un décor hautement symbolique, Liu Bolin continue de dénoncer avec finesse certaines questions importantes de notre temps en questionnant la place de l'individu dans son propre environnement.

Sa disparition stimule les spectateurs à la fois intellectuellement et émotionnellement, juste le temps pour eux de découvrir la silhouette cachée dans la photo. "J'espère que mes travaux seront un avertissement pour ma génération et pour les générations à venir".

L'exposition se déroulera simultanément avec la rétrospective de l'artiste qui aura lieu à la Maison Européenne de la Photographie du 6 au 29 octobre. Cette première monographie institutionnelle de l'artiste en France couvrira dix ans de sa production artistique axée sur quatre thèmes principaux: la politique et la censure, la tradition et la culture chinoise, la société de consommation et la liberté de la presse.

Bohiding in the city - Screen in Rest, 2017, Archival pigment print, 120 x 150 cm

Du 9 septembre au 8 janvier, Liu Bolin investira la Galerie des Enfants du Centre Pompidou dans le cadre de l'événement Galerie Party pour célébrer le 40ème anniversaire du Musée. À cette occasion, il réalisera une performance publique en disparaissant devant une installation conçue par Gaëlle Gabillet et Stéphane Villard du studio GGSV.

Liu Bolin est né à Binzhou (province de Shandong), en 1973, en Chine, et a étudié la sculpture à CAFA, Central Academy of Fine Arts, diplômé d'un MFA en 2001. Au cours de cette dernière décennie, son travail a été largement exposé dans de nombreux musées et institutions à travers le monde. Il vit et travaille à Pékin.

Opening on Thursday September 7th from 6am to 9am

Liu Bolin, Hiding in the city - Municipal Waste, 2014 Archival pigment print, 120 x 150 cm

For this coming September Galerie Paris-Beijing is pleased to present Revealing Disappearance, Liu Bolin latest solo exhibition witnessing the artist's engagement on environmental issues.

Since the beginning of his career, ecology has been a central topic of Liu Bolin's artistic production. In 2011 he braved the polluted waters of the Yellow River in one of the most industrialized regions of his country, two years ago he organized a collective performance at the edge of a large artificial forest aimed to stop the spreading of the Gobi desert in the Northern territories of China. More recently he stood among piles of garbage in a waste collection center in Bangalore, India. Last June, the artist flew to the French Atlantic Coast where he achieved two new performances in collaboration with Surfrider Foundation Europe to raise public awareness on the issue of marine litter. For decades the NGO has launched awareness campaigns against pollution caused by plastic waste, working to preserve the ocean.

The exhibition will display the photographs linked to his most recent intervention in France as well as his prior performances in China and India, where rapid industrialization and population growth have adversely affected urban climates, particularly air quality. According to The State of Global Air 2017 report, in 2015 both countries saw around 1.1 million early deaths due to air pollution.

Along with his renowned photographic work, one site-specific installation from the VISA Portrait series, made of dozen of car air filters will be also on display at the gallery. The chromatic difference due to the pollution degree of its components immediately draws the viewer's attention. A second reading will reveal an unknown face. The installation plays with the concept of individuality and the notion of cause and effect.

Liu Bolin, The Winter Solstice, 2016, video, 28m (video still)

The 28-minute video Winter Solstice (2016) will be also presented to the public for the first time in Paris. The images show camouflaged dancers struggling as they fade into Beijing's smog on December 20th, two days before the winter solstice, an important festival in the traditional Chinese calendar, with Marcel Duchamp's Musical Erratum as background sound. The choreography is inspired by the movements people instinctively make when their lives are suppressed.

This body of works represents a reflection about the deleterious consequences of human actions on our own habitat. We are now far from the Taoist principles at the core of Chinese Tradition, teaching a sustainable and harmonious relationship between humans and nature.

Liu Bolin believes the “Man develops while destroying his own environment and exploiting himself. The price he has to pay for the splendid civilization is the loss of awareness of his membership in the animal kingdom. Indulging in the development he has achieved, man is in fact digging his own grave with his greed. People require too much from the nature and environment. We will soon realise how tiny we are. Our desire dominates our behaviour. We'll face a lot of problems in future”.

By disappearing in a highly symbolic background Liu Bolin continues to denounce with finesse some important issues of our time while questioning the place of the individual in his or her own environment. His disappearance challenges the viewers both intellectually and emotionally, just the time for them to discover the silhouette hiding in the photograph. “I hope my works will act like a warning for my generation and for generations to come”.

The show will take place simultaneously with the artist's retrospective, held at the Maison Européenne de la Photographie from Sept 6th to Oct 29th. This first institutional monograph of the artist in France will cover ten years of his artistic production focusing on four main themes: politics and censorship, tradition and Chinese culture, consumer society and freedom of the press.

From September 9th to January 8th Liu Bolin will take over the Galerie des Enfants of the Centre Pompidou as part of the event Galerie Party to celebrate the Museum's 40th anniversary. On this occasion he will orchestrate a public performance by disappearing in front of the installation designed by Gaëlle Gabillet and Stéphane Villard from Studio GGSV.
